B-FILE MODALITIES (= IMPROVING OR AGGRAVING CIRCUMSTANCES):

It's about the causal situation, i.e. the cause, which only becomes recognizable through the physical or emotional reaction to it.

- In the case of a hit coming from outside (B), this is easy, it becomes obvious in the injury (C).
- Developmental problems are also causal as they come from within and manifest themselves in problems adapting to adulthood or aging.
- But, in many cases the causal background responsible for an illness is not immediately recognizable because it is the result of living conditions. Problems in dealing with environmental conditions manifest themselves in the form of modalities. Modalities are the circumstances that bring about an improvement or worsening of the condition of the sick. Modalities represent an individual tolerance pattern that the sick have with regard to environmental influences, which is a guide for the homeopathic prescription.

The causal symptoms in the anamnesis, i.e. causes and modalities, represent dynamic influences. On closer examination, two polar opposite sources of these influences are revealed. This means that external modalities require the mediation of sensory organs: e.g. headache in the sun.

Conversely, the internal modalities are the result of inner-body processes that are based on stages of development, adaptation to biological rhythms, etc.: e.g. diarrhea during menstruation.

The logic of using this polarity of modalities is that there must be pairs of opposites, that is, that an external modality must be opposed by a presupposing internal one. E.g. diarrhea during menstruation (int.) and diarrhea caused by milk (ext.).

This applies not only to the causal symptoms B, which can be split into B (internal causal symptoms) and B (external causal symptoms), it also applies to the emotional symptoms A, in which symptoms of internal mood, Ai, and symptoms of externally oriented sensitivity are opposed to each other.

The cause-effect formula now looks like this:

Ai><Ae + Bi><Be = C + characteristic properties

This results in two causal situations:

- a. Internal causality: Adaptation problems due to an adaptation potential that has not yet been sufficiently developed. Dynamically the person affected has hardly any options to choose from; he is faced with rejected but unavoidable criteria.
 - problems that occur from one developmental stage to the next, e.g. birth shock, puberty, old age, gender-specific complaints
 - family-inherited mental disorders or a medical history of mental disorders
 - symptoms that are persistent or occur repeatedly at the same times of day or when falling asleep, sleeping or waking up. The reason for this is the organ clock, whose rhythm is internal. Internal causal symptoms therefore include, for example, being startled when falling asleep or waking up from sleep.
 - . organ clock
 - mind or physical symptoms that are triggered by physical symptoms, such as pain causing shortness of breath, coughing causing crying, etc.
 - Emotional symptoms that are triggered by physiological processes, e.g. fear of defecation or waking up when urinating.

- Addictive behavior. This is an internalized "escape from reality".
- b: external causality in the form of a reaction to circumstances: the changing external social circumstances prove to be favorable > or unfavorable < for the existing adaptation potential.
 - general improving aggravating circumstances:
 - · Eat Drink:
 - Allergies:
 - Seasons + times of day: being exposed to different topics depending on the time of day:
 - Temperature, weather: The influence of the surrounding environment on emotionality.
 - · Sensory and contact sensitivities:
 - the consequences of physical influences such as light, noise, temperature, weather, pressure, clothing, bedding, etc.
 - the consequences of movements, various exertions, lifting, leaning, postures as lying, standing, sitting, bending, stretching, etc.
 - the consequences of events or intolerable circumstances such as excitement, shock, poisoning, injuries, allergies, etc.
 - · Pathologies that can be modalitiesc.

c. external: human adaptability is overwhelmed by shock-like situations

- individual sensitivities to certain destructive influences, traumas:
- destructive influences beyond the individual's adaptive potential.
- * The underlined symptoms mean internal causality (a.), the other external ones are causal symptoms mediated by the sense organs (b. + c.). A short explanation of their use can be found at the beginning of the ABC file and in the 3rd part of the series of articles "Beyond gut feeling" with the subtitle "The final step".

It should be mentioned here that this internal-external duality only exists in the left half of the cause/effect formula. It is about the internal prerequisites of a sick person to react symptomatically to external stimuli.

On the right side of the cause-reaction formula, the attributes of the C symptoms (reactions) in the form of their characteristics, e.g. their pain characteristics, have particular significance. The reason lies in their close content-related relationship to the A symptoms (mental symptoms).

a. internal causality: the cause lies in a lack of own potential:

Basically, what we have here are illnesses that recur in the family history. This includes any serious illness that has occurred in at least three family members.

B	family history of cancer	being exposed to insoluble social conditions and therefore to ongoing conflicts, not being able to adapt, only being able to overgrow oneself to the point of self-destruction
B	family history of syphilis	see miasms below
B	family history of tuberculosis	see miasms below

Miasms:

Based on my new translation, they can be assigned relatively well, but like all assignments, this is subject to a certain degree of subjectivity. I now routinely consider miasmatics for reference purposes. In the free M-file you will find seven miasmatic rubrics based on around 500 to 600 common homeopathic remedies, which I have added to the general symptoms of the homeopathy program I use (Radar). In this matter, I refer to the book Miasmatic Series No. 10 by Peter Gienow.

I use two miasms of external causality, shock miasma and drug miasma, and five miasms of internal causality, psora, tuberculinia, sycosis, syphilinia, carcinogenia.

If you want to know how I derived the miasma texts from the meanings of symptoms, you can find the information in the M-file. You can try to derive them yourself using the "anamnesis" created here for each miasma. In any case, the process is the same as for cases of illness.

В	Psora Section see M-file	Represents uncertainty about the conditions of social reciprocity, being unable to meet them, or one is capable but subject to arbitrary criteria that one cannot fulfill
В	Tuberculinia Section see M-file	wishing an overhelming communicative need, but to be without resonance in this need, of only being able to hold back oneself or aggressively oppose one's environment
В	Sycosis Section see M-file	Having to face the conditions of social presence, but not being able to cope with them, therefore feels the need to hide one's overtaxing in order to be socially secured through the appearance of competence
В	Syphilinia Section see M-file	Expansive dynamics that cannot withdraw its pursuit of social distinctiveness despite a lack of impact or insurmountable external resistance, being not able to hold back, but can only assert itself or fail.
В	Carcinogenia Section see M-file	Problem of wanting to adapt for the sake of social reciprocityat to all costs, but being exposed to a conflict that cannot be resolved through adaptation (cancer).

B	Shock miasma	Consequences of traumatic events, accidents and
	Section see M-file	operations
B	Drug miasma	Consequences of conventional medical
